

Hello members of the Bay Area Geophysical Society. I hope you all had an enjoyable Labor Day weekend.

I know this is rather last minute, but I am emailing you to let you know of an SEG sponsored event being hosted tomorrow (Thursday September 5) by the Stanford University Geophysical Society. SEG Honorary Lecturer Nick Moldovenu will be presenting his presentation listed below at 3:15 in the Hartley Center at Stanford, which is on the first floor of the Mitchell Building. He will also be presenting the lecture at Cal on Friday.

One other note, although it is always better for a small society like ours to have as many people as possible attend these type of lectures and seminars in person, as long time BAGS member Bill Abriel pointed out to me yesterday, 1) the Bay Area is a very spread out/congested region and it is not always possible to make it to a meeting site, and 2) we live in an increasingly web-based society with many companies offering online meetings and presentation capabilities. Thus I will be looking at providing access to future lectures via one of the many applications that allow for this. More on that in the near future....

Best regards,

David

David Alumbaugh

BAGS President

Principal Geoscientist

NEOS GeoSolutions

6210 Stoneridge Mall Road, Suite 450

Pleasanton, CA 94588

925-738-2216 : Work

510-717-7179 : Cell

dalumbaugh@neosgeo.com